

Thank you!

We would like to thank everyone who has believed and still believes in this journal. We appreciate it because we know that it is difficult to trust a journal that is not listed in MathSciNet and zbMATH. It took us over a year to get listed by these important reviewing databases, and as of today none of the citations of our papers are counted by these databases. Nevertheless we have courageous authors who have entrusted us with their excellent research results. Our sincere thanks go to them. It would have been more professionally rewarding for them to select an established venue for their work. But they have chosen to support the birth of a new journal. It is a genuine sacrifice. We would like to thank the editors and referees for their valuable time in helping improve the quality of the published papers. What a great service to the mathematical community!

Alas, we cannot pay you back right now. What we can and want to do is to make a promise that we will do everything in our power to make ADAM one of the leading journals in its field. When this happens there will be no difference in the databases between papers submitted to the emerging journal and those submitted to its established future version. It may take another year or two to achieve the status that one expects from a high-quality journal. We will keep the journal Diamond Open Access: free for authors and free for readers. However, ADAM can only succeed in this endeavour if we all believe in its future and you keep sending us your high-quality work.
